MICHELLE MARSH

THEN: Michelle first shot to fame on the cover of the Dally Star in 2000. She displayed her 32FF bust for the first time on Page 3 of the Star in October 2002.

NOW: Michelle, 23, has since teamed up with Lucy Pinder, 21, to form the UK's top glamour duo. She's also graced the covers of Loaded and Nuts and modelled everywhere from France to Mexico. And she's still a big favourite with fans everywhere.

larried to SHOW these girls respect - or you just might end up regretting it.

They may look like ordinary women, but one false move and you could end up wearing concrete boots. look like ordinary

That's because these three lasses are gangsters' molls. And they're connected to some of the most dangerous villains in the world the world.

They enjoy a life full of diamonds and luxury, just like they do in the movies. Think of sexy Drea De Matteo, 33, who stars as Adriana de Cerva in The Sopranos, or Ginger McKenna in the hit mafia movie Casino, played by Sharon Stone, 47. But for all the bling and luxury,

■ by KATE JACKSON

there's a downside to being the dutiful wife of a hardened criminal.

A new show on Five tonight uncovers the hidden world of today's gangsters' molls and exposes the way women must behave if they become part of The Firm.

Strife

Presented by Romie Kray's widow Kate, the show gives a fascinating glimpse of the ups and downs of being the trouble and strife to a real-life hood. So sit down and behave yourselves, as we take a trip through the underworld... • Gangsters' Wives is on Five tonight at 11pm.

DANGER: Kate Kray

•Ron's rivals made threats to kill me<sup>9</sup>

KATE Kray, 49, was married to one half of the world's most notorious gangster duo – Ronnie Kray.
She met him while taking letters to him in Broadmoor hospital. She married him in 1989 and was with him until he died in 1995.
It wasn't exactly a normal marriage – her husband was gay, schizophrenic and a murderer. But Kate, who now lives in Eastbourne with new husband Leo O'Reilly, says: "Ronnie had such an aura. He was so charismatic." In the show, Kate talks to other gangsters' wives about the ups and downs of being in love with a criminal She explains: "Yes, there's the glam-our and the bling. But the flip side is you might spend half your life outside Pentonville prison.

Upset

"I went to Broadmoor for 10 years – and I hadn't done anything wrong," She adds: "I was in danger on several occasions. There were rival people who had upset Ronnie and had threatened to kill me.
"It's a very dangerous world. I've witnessed the most horrendous things."

They said I had to show off my legs<sup>9</sup>

Flirting

'He has this look, he is the smiling viper<sup>9</sup>

AMAYA Wilson, 36, has been with doorman and hardman Steve Knock just over a year. Steve makes sure his girlfriend wants for nothing, yet Amaya continues to work as a sales representative.

For Christmas she has asked for a boob job and a Mercedes!

"I had no idea who Steve was when I met him," admits Amaya.

"Slowly I started to notice things. Wherever we went – it didn't matter if it was the back end of nowhere – there was always somone who knew him.

"Everyone we met had the utoost respect for Steve. We didn't ever have a conversation about it. I just started piecing things together. "But I know when to stop asking questions!

WORRY: Amaya Wilson

Tough

"He's a big, tough guy, but he's a pussycat underneath. He has this look though. "He can have a row with a smile on his face. Never be fooled by that viper's smile."

She adds: "The best thing about living this life is the holidays. We're always away."
But the downside is the risk that Steve will get hurt. He's already been stabbed twice and even survived after being shot in the head.
Amaya, of Hartley, Kent, says: "I worry I'll come home and something will have happened to him.
"I look at him sometimes and think of the things he gets up to, and I think to myself, 'Don't die on me babe.'
"But you can't live life like that. We just go along as we are."

THE dilemma faced by the bloke in tonight's ITV1 drama, WALK AWAY AND I STUMBLE WALK AWAY AND I STUMBLE (9pm), is one which will no doubt be sadly familiar to millions of married men. Should he stay with his wife, to whom he's been faithful for 13 happy years, or shack up for regular sex with Tamzin Outhwaite?

As it hanges this chap Andy.

As it happens, this chap, Andy (played by Mark Strong), decides he doesn't need to think about it he doesn't need to think about it for very long, and by the middle of tonight's opening episode (it finishes tomorrow at the same time), he's turned his back on his poor wife (Julie Graham), along with their three kids, in favour of a regular bunk-up with Ian Beale's ex. But Tamzin, known for the purposes of the story as Claire, turns out to come with a fair bit of (ITV1, 7.30pm, 8.30pm) finds Sunita making a shock discovery about her hubby. No, not the fact that he's a smug pillock who deserves a smack in the teeth (I think she's already aware of that) but that he's secretly the father of several kids, scattered among his retail empire's female workforce. Amber, who turned up the other night, is just one of them.

MEANWHILE, it's the start of a tense week in HOLLYOAKS (Channel 4, 6.30pm) as Justin goes on trial for the murder of racist scumbag Macki. He's innocent, of course, but you can't help but fear that the jury will He's innocent, of course, but you can't help but fear that the jury will consist of the usual bunch of gullible thickies who tend to get called up for soap trials.

FINALLY, tonight's modernday Shakespeare adaptation is MACBETH (BBC1, 8.30pm). He's now the head chef in a London restaurant.

TV GUIDE

...ON LAST NIGHT'S T

MORE than forty light years away, half in frozen darkness, half in permanent sunlight, lies the planet Aurelia. Discovered by the most sophisticated space-travelling telescope, Aurelia is the closest planet to us that's able to support life.

If you're wondering why this news isn't on today's fromt page, relax. The telescope hasn't been launched yet. Aurelia hasn't been found. But one day, scientists believe within the next 10 years, it could be.

ALIEN WORLDS (Saturday, C4), combined the expertise of boffins with cutting-edge techniques in computer animation, to give us an eye-popping glimpse of what life on other planets might look like. The result is like a cross between Sesame Street and a 1970s album cover. A forest of roasted turkeys topped with fuschia-pink lampshades squelches its way through a sea of gravy. The golpog, a kind of muppet-ostrich-camel, watches for sudden changes of atmosphere with its third eye. The mudpod, which looks like an armoured beaver, carves out rivers and lagoons with its snout.

Science

It may sound as if the programme-makers ate some rather strange mushrooms before they started work. But this wacky vision of other worlds is based on solid science.

The experts carefully calculated what a planet would need to support life, and what that life might look like. Some bits are not so strange. They reckon all planets need so strange. They reckon all planets need water, for example, and every creature, no matter how much it looks like something from The Lord of the Rings, ends up moving, breathing and seeing in the same way as the more boring life-forms here on Planet Earth.

This looks like being a fascinating series. But some of us might think there are enough mysteries back home that need solving before we go exploring strange, new worlds.

A good example is Alien Worlds' ultra-serious and very believable presenter, Dr Armand Leroi. Where did he come from? Does he ever smile? Is he, in fact, a distant relative of Mr Spock?

Cancer lie was wicked

I TOLD an old friend I'd anted her to feel sorry for me.

If was a wicked and downright lie and I feel so ashamed of myself.

She keeps ringing up to ask how I am and I feel sick to the pit of my stomach every time I squeak "fine".

It all started when my stomach every time I squeak "fine".

It all started when we bumped into each other in the supermarket.

We hadn't seen each other in years. She was looking amazing – all expensive blonde highlights and designer gear, while I looked overweight and rough.

I felt so embarrassed I just blurted out: "I'm sorry I'm not looking my best. I'm just getting over cancer, you know?" I don't know why I said it but now it's opened up this horrible can of worms.

She keeps ringing me and wants to hold charity coffee mornings in my name. I keep think-ing something terrible should happen to me to pay me back.

JANE SAYS There's no getting away from the fact you made one hell of a mistake. Being flip-of a mistake. Being filppant about something as cruel as cancer is never acceptable. I suggest you make the effort to go and see your friend and explain that there's been a terrible misunderstanding. Explain that you have been feeling unwell lately and worried that you might have cancer. But reassure her that you're in the clear. That said, it's possible from the way you've from the way you've been acting that you could be suffering from anxiety or depression so go and see your GP and ask for help.

I'VE managed to cause a major family row simply by laying down a few ground rules.Now my husband's family is threatening to boycott our house this Christmas.

house this Christmas.

My sister in-law has slammed the phone down on me more than once and my niece (her daughter) says I'm sexually retarded.

Our drama started in the summer when my brother asked if my 17-year old niece could come and stay with us. We're currently living in London and he thought that she'd benefit from the experience. she'd benefit from the experience

Eventually he dropped me an e-mail explaining she'd be arriving on January 3 for six weeks. I replied with a few pointers. I made it clear I expected the girl to make the best use of her time. She was to get up by 9.30am each day and spend her time studying, visiting places of interest or working. Our telephone was to be out of bounds, except for emergencies, and she was to use her own mobile to call friends. Plus no texting at the table – my pet hate.

Furious

As I wasn't planning to charge her for her stay, she would be expected to help with the washing up, baby-sit and generally pitch

And she was NOT to bring male And she was NOT to oring more friends back or have sex with her boyfriend under my roof.

But now her mum has gone absolutely ballistic, She's furious with me for daring to suggest her precious daughter should work or help around my house. Apparently, the girl's boyfriend virtually lives in her bedroom and she thinks I've got a damn cheek for daring to take the moral high ground.

My mum-in-law says the family plans to avoid me this Christmas plans to avoid me this christmas and not send my kids any toys. All I was trying to do was make things clear for everyone. But I've put my foot in it and I'm being portrayed as a frigid spoilsport.

JANE SAYS: Look, this is your home and you're entitled to lay down whichever rules you feel are appropriate.

Believe me, I'm with you all the way, If you don't want an unmotivated 17-year-old flopping round your house and spending hours on your phone, then you are fully entitled to say so.

As for slapping a ban on teenage sex, then good for you. You've stayed true to your principles. How is that taking the moral high ground?

My feeling is you've had a lucky escape on the niece and the Christmas front.

So the spoilt brat isn't coming—what a relief.
And you don't have to buy gifts for nit-picking relatives.
Sounds like a result to me. I'm sure that your own children won't even notice that they're a couple of presents down. What are you planning for next year?

going for a drink "as friends".

Then, when I'd turned him down a dozen times, he started getting nasty. He would call at all times of the day and night and hiss that I waugly, fat and stupid.

In the end my dad got on the phone and told him to clear off.

But lately I've noticed him hanging around outside my work.
I hear that he's got a new girlfriend now but he is still stalking me. I'm terrified and don't know what to do.

JANE SAYS: Go back to your father and tell him about this latest development. You need someone strong and reliable to help you at this scary time.

Don't be too proud to admit that you're frightened and need help.

Our consumer guide to the latest mobile phones in the market place

The majority of mobile phone users in the UK want to be able to send and receive emails via their handsets, but they also want to be able to control who they receive emails from, and don't want to have to pay a fortune for the service.

A consumer survey, carried out by mobile software firm Critical Path.

mobile software firm Critical Path, identified a potential market of more than 16 million consumers in the UK who want mobile email.

The research found that 54 per cent of consumers said access to mobile emails from their friends was most important, and unsurprisingly, it revealed that the most unpopular person to receive email from during personal time is the boss - they would rather near from an ex-boyrriend or ex-girlfriend.

However, more than half (56 per cent) said they would feel out of touch with friends and family without email access for just a without email access for just a single week.

The survey also found that 88 per cent of those who responded to the survey still check their email for messages from family and friends while on holiday, highlighting just how important mobile email communication has become in everyday life.

communication has become in everyday life.

Mike Serbinis, chief technology officer at Critical Path, said:

"Consumers want an affordable service that is easy to use, works on their current phone, and can deliver messages from their current email account. Operators who offer a simple, affordable mobile email service that allows consumers to use their current phone and choose the messages that matter will reap the biggest rewards."

The survey also revealed that less the survey also reveaued that less than half (48 per cent) of mobile phone users were aware of whether or not their handset actually had email capabilities. Most of the current handsets are perfectly geared up for email. The new Nokia N70, which comes with a 2 megapixel camera, video calling, and Bluetooth wireless connectivity, also has built-in e-mail capability that allows users to send text, pictures or voice clips to any other email address, to another Nokia N70, or to another MMS-capable phone. The Motorola ROKR, one of the latest music phones, also allows users to read, write and send emails, from virtually anywhere, just as easily as if they were sending them from a desktop computer.

Mobile Express is currently offering the Nokia N70 free on 3 with 500 any time any network minutes and 100 texts per month. The monthly line rental of £30 per month has been reduced to half price line rental for eight months, on an 18-month contract, making a saving of £120.00.
